The No-Car Gig Blueprint

Work multiple gig apps without putting miles on your own car

The big idea

Your own car costs more than you think: tires, brakes, oil, insurance changes and depreciation. A weekly rental turns all of that into one predictable cost you can see, plan around and cap, and your own car stays home. Stop asking how much did I make? Start asking how much did I keep after the car?

The 60-second math

- Weekly car cost = rental rate + fees + fuel + tolls/parking + any added insurance
- Hours to cover the car = weekly car cost / your gross dollars per hour
- Net per hour = (gross pay - car cost - other expenses) / hours worked

4 rules in a nutshell

- 1. Check the rental contract and your insurance for delivery use before you book.
- 2. Book weekly and prepay, so your car cost is known up front.
- 3. Build your day around one or two core apps, with fillers for slow periods.
- 4. Track miles, pay and costs daily, and review net per hour every Sunday.

Inside the full program

- The best times to rent and how timing can change what you pay
- Security deposit requirements at the major rental car companies
- Renting with imperfect credit: card options to look at and how companies treat them
- Getting a vehicle for a month without paying for it all at once
- The daily multi-app workflow, printable weekly tracker and break-even numbers
- Fine-print checklist for rental contracts, insurance and app rules

About Mamie

Mamie is a former rental car manager with 10 years in the rental car industry, so she knows how rental companies price, hold deposits and handle gig drivers, and what to ask at the counter. She has been a full-time gig worker since 2020 across 10+ platforms and is the author of The 5-Star Gig Worker: Book 1. This blueprint is the system she uses to keep more of what she earns.
